THE GOVERNOR WAS RIGHT

The newspapers of Nevada of both political parties have been condemning Governor Sparks for vetoing the bill prohibiting saloons within five miles of irrigation works and many of them have predicted that the government will withdraw its canal building forces from Nevada, merely because the bill did not pass. All such talk is bubble and mere child's prattle. The government will do nothing of the kind; the work will go right on and be pushed to completion. At first it did seem that the Governor had made a mistake in vetoing the bill, but a study of the conditions indicates plainly that he was right. In the first place there was already a law upon the statutes which governs such cases, if the county authorities have the backbone to enforce it. Hence no other law is needed. In the second place the bill could be defined in no other manner than special legislation in that it prohibited the retailing, but provided for the wholesaling of liquor. The bill also exempted saloons that had been in business six months prior to its passage. This, in itself, would be special legislation, and the Herald would not be surprised if the owners of these saloons were the conceivors of the bill, and not the Interior Department of the United States Government, as the people were led to believe.

The Herald would like to see damnable, morderous dives along the line of the government canals closed up. But it does not believe Governor Sparks entitled to any censure whatever on account of his veto. It was his duty to guard against special legislation, and keep the statutes of Nevada clear of unnecessary measures. The bill in question was unnecessary. The county commissioners have all power to close up every dive on the government ditches. And again, the internal revenue collector could be instructed to refuse to issue the government liquor license. This would solve the whole question.—Nevada State Herald.

The Hardin Flop.

Yesterday a man on the street asked the editor of the Appeal what he thought of the passing of Col. Hardin from the ranks of the Democrats to the Republicans. The questioner was somewhat surprised when the writer pleaded ignorance of the fact that the party had lost Col. Hardin. His passing from one state of mind into another must have been managed as quietly as his change of heart on the Fellow Servant bill, when the gentleman after an interview with George Nixon voted against a bill which he introduced himself. Fickleness of mind and action appear to have long been a characteristic of the debonair and gallant Colonel.

If mere averdopise counted there is no question but that his sudden stepping off the platform of the Democratic party of Nevada, and coming down unannounced upon the Republican party would have unquestionably disturbed the equilibrium of both platforms.

The disturbance would have been of sufficient gravity to have been duly recorded upon every synograph in the State.

The weight which he carries in political circles however is not such as can be weighed on a pair of hay scales.
